POLICE CHIEF GLEASON IS PLAYING BOSSES' GAME IN GIRLS' STRIKE

Says Agnes Nestor In Testimony Before Federal Commission—Blames Orders From "Higher Up" for Slews of Union Waitresses' Arrests.

Chief of Police Gleason is playing the employers' end in the waitresses' strike now on, and did the same thing when he was a police captain fighting women of the glove workers' union, according to Agnes Nestor. She is president of the Women's Trade Union League and the International Glove Workers' Union, and testified before the federal industrial relations commission yesterday.

"I saw a picket arrested yesterday," she said. "We passed her as she was walking up and down the sidewalk. There was no other person near her. She was not talking to anybody nor making any motions of any sort.

"A patrol wagon swung around the corner. Two uniformed policemen got out. They took the picket and hustled her into the wagon.

"Hundreds of just such arrests have been made during the Knab and Henrici strikes this year. The plan is to get us into court, eat up our funds and break the spirit of the girls. It only makes the girls all the more determined.
